

St Margaret's Notebook

October 12, 2006

From the rector

“All of creation is sacred. Everything is holy,”

Andrew Gordon and Haley Hart reminded us from the pulpit last Sunday as they reflected on St Francis and their pilgrimage to Assisi.

My Old Testament professor at Sewanee was fond of saying

“Every living this has nephesh.”

“Nephesh” is Hebrew for “soul” – the imprint of God.

I dare say that the orange sea of pumpkins covering our lawn has the divine imprint.

As I look at the pictures of this week's patch and realize that two year old Martha Minor or twins Honora and John Bohannon were not yet born when the first patch was laid out in 2004.

Newborn twins Danny and Jamie Williams or Bailey Maierhofer could very easily be in next year's photos.
Just as infant Emie Fleck appeared surrounded by orange only two short years ago.

New faces appear among long-time parishioners to unload
and arrange the pumpkins.

All is a reminder of the changelessness of God in our ever changing lives.

For me, the pumpkin patch points to the sacredness of the life lived day after day, year after year on the lawn of the “little white church on the corner.”

God appears among us whether we're having lemonade after summer worship, processing in for a wedding or standing outside with a casket,
taking photos of the newly baptized, looking for Easter eggs,
or encountering those needing assistance from Outreach.

Yes, all of creation is holy.

the lawn, the pumpkins, the little white church on the corner, the lives are merely reminders of the ever present love of God.
